Introduction

This booklet contains useful advice to help you find somewhere to live. In Giessen and Friedberg, that is not always easy.

Rooms in halls of residence and shared apartments can be in short supply, particularly in the winter semester.

We therefore recommend that you start looking for somewhere to live as soon as you have your university admission certificate and have decided that you want to study in Giessen or Friedberg. The closer you get to the start of the semester, the more difficult it will be to find accommodation.

As more students apply for a place in a hall of residence run by Student Services than there are rooms available, students often need to look for private sector accommodation in shared apartments, halls of residence or individual apartments.

We cannot vouch for the quality of the rooms or apartments or for the completeness of the information in this booklet. There could be other useful tips for students looking for accommodation in the area that we know nothing about. We would therefore be pleased to hear from you if you have any comments, ideas or suggestions for improving this booklet.

1. Halls of residence

1.1 Student halls of residence run by Giessen Student Services

Student Services has reasonably priced rooms in halls of residence (upwards of EUR 180 a month) in Giessen and Friedberg. However, many students apply for these rooms. You may therefore find yourself unable to obtain a room in the first semester.

If that should happen, put your name on the waiting list for a room in a hall of residence. Your name is kept on the waiting list for twelve months.

The twelve months start from the date on which you wish to move in. If you have not been offered a room in a hall of residence after that date and would still like to be considered for one, you must let Student Services know.

Once a month Student Services carries out a survey before the six months are over to find out who is still interested in being allocated a room. The survey will be sent to you by email. You therefore need to make sure that the Halls of Residence Management at Student Services always has your current email address. If you do not reply to the Student Services survey, your name will be removed from the waiting list. A reply means that your application will run until the next survey.

1.2 Privately run halls of residence in Giessen

Apart from the halls of residence run by Student Services, there are also privately run halls of residence in Giessen.

2. Looking for private sector accommodation

This section provides useful advice about looking for private sector accommodation in Giessen and Friedberg. Of course, we cannot vouch for the quality of the apartments or rooms. It is always advisable to look at the room before agreeing to rent it.

There are good train connections between Giessen and Friedberg and the two towns are only about 20 minutes apart by train. As there are more shared apartments in Giessen than in Friedberg, students in Friedberg might well be advised to look for accommodation in Giessen, too. Apart from looking for somewhere to live in Giessen and Friedberg, it is worthwhile extending your search to the surrounding areas. Rents are frequently far lower in smaller villages not far from Giessen and Friedberg and the bus and train connections are often reasonable. A JLU or THM semester ticket allows you to use the local public transport services free of charge, so that having to take a bus or train will not entail additional expenses.

2.1 Help from Giessen Student Services

Giessen Student Services can help you with your search for private sector accommodation in Giessen and Friedberg.
2.1 “Housing for Help”

As an alternative to applying for a room in a hall of residence or looking for private sector accommodation, the “Housing for Help” scheme proposes a special form of shared accommodation. People living in Giessen provide low-rent accommodation for students in exchange for help with small jobs around the home or in the garden or with the children. Student Services has set up a website at www.wohnen-fuer-mithilfe.de where landlords and students can advertise. The website also contains further information about the scheme. More students usually advertise than landlords, so the “Housing for Help” scheme cannot guarantee that you will find a room quickly. At the same time, the scheme has considerable advantages for both landlords and students. First and foremost, students benefit from greater social integration and gain an insight into life in the town.

2.1.2 Accommodation ads

Student Services maintains a list of apartments and rooms currently available to rent. Students seeking accommodation can also advertise on this website free of charge.

2.2 International apartment sharing for THM students

“International Apartment Sharing” (WG International) helps international students at the Technische Hochschule Mittelhessen (THM) to find rooms in shared apartments in the area and provides:

• Advice and information on sharing an apartment in Germany and on general accommodation matters
• Help to look for vacant rooms or information on current vacancies
• Support by accompanying students going to view a shared apartment or room

The team searches the housing market for shared apartments where the occupants are interested in living in a cross-cultural environment. “International Apartment Sharing” is an initiative with an impact on society and encourages greater openness towards international students on the housing market and cross-cultural exchange.

2.3 Online accommodation portals

The best way of looking for a room in a shared apartment or for accommodation in the private sector is to use online portals. Many of them allow you to place an ad free of charge. Here is a selection of online portals:

3. Shared apartments (Wohngemeinschaft/ WG)

3.1 General information

In a shared apartment, each person usually has his or her own room. The bathroom and kitchen are shared with the other occupants. Shared apartments are a common form of accommodation for students in Germany. To rent an entire apartment or house, you frequently need to provide proof of income or a guarantor. If you rent a room in a shared apartment, that is not usually the case.

3.1.1 Furnished / Unfurnished

It is not usual for the rooms to be furnished. Sometimes you can negotiate a price for some of the furniture but unless otherwise stated in the advertisement, you should be prepared to find an empty room. It is only usual for rooms to be fully furnished when they are sublet. Further information on subletting is given in the next section. For information about where to find inexpensive furniture and furnishings, please go to section 4 “Furniture and furnishings”.

3.1.2 Subletting

Subletting means that the room is let for a specific time only. That often occurs because the person who normally occupies the room is spending a semester abroad or has a practical placement in another town. Subletting can be a good solution while you are finding your feet. Although you usually have to move again at the end of the specified period, the competition is less fierce for sublets as they are generally less popular than long-term lets. While you are subletting you have time to look for a room with an open-ended tenancy agreement. What is more, someone sharing the apartment occasionally decides to move out while you are subletting and you can then take over his/her room on a long-term basis.

Private rooms to let (often from Giessen outgoing students subletting their flats for incoming students) can be found on Giessen University’s flat exchange on

www.uni-giessen.de/wherelive

3.1.3 Contacting people in a shared apartment

Sharing an apartment usually means living with people of roughly the same age as yourself. It is therefore not usual to be formal when you contact them; the occupants usually say “du” to each other. You generally contact the people sharing an apartment with a spare room by phone or email. If you contact them by email, the best thing to do is to give your telephone number and to say something about yourself in the message. Here is an example of an email enquiry:

Dear flat-sharing community,

My name is Selma and I will be a business administration student in Giessen as of October. I am looking for a nice shared apartment in which to live. I am 21, female, and have already participated in a German language course in Germany. As I lived in a shared flat for the time of the language course I am already an experienced flat sharer. I am a non-smoker, orderly, uncomplicated, and would be glad to get your call so we can make an appointment. My telephone number is: 0176…

Best regards,

Selma

3.1.4 Viewing the shared apartment

The next thing is to go and look at the room and to meet the people already living in the shared apartment. After you have viewed the apartment, it is usual for everyone to spend 15-30 minutes getting to know each other to see whether you could all get along together. As apartment sharing is very popular in Germany and there is a shortage of rooms in Giessen and Friedberg, several applicants will probably view the room. The people living in the shared apartment then choose the applicant who seems to fit best. They generally let you know whether or not you have been chosen to share the apartment a few days after the viewing.

The extent to which life in a shared apartment is truly communal varies from one apartment to the next. In some shared apartments the occupants frequently meet in the kitchen, go shopping and cook together.

In other shared apartments the occupants hardly spend any time together. The indication “Wir sind keine Zweck-WG” (We are not just a means to an end) in an advert for a room in a shared apartment generally means that occupants want a form of community life. “Zweck-WG” is the term used for shared apartments whose occupants hardly spend any time together and live together primarily because it is generally cheaper to share an apartment.

3.2 Living in a shared apartment

3.2.1 Communal living or a means to an end?

The fridge is often divided into sections or shelves, giving each occupant space for his/her own food items. In some shared apartments, however, some food items and other consumables are bought and used communally (e.g. butter, milk, salt, sugar, oil, cleaning products). Shared apartments also exist in which all foodstuffs and consumables are paid for out of a communal kitty to which everyone contributes on a regular basis.

3.2.2 Communal kitty

To make everyday life as pleasant as possible and to avoid arguments, many shared apartments have a cleaning rota that specifies who cleans what part of the apartment and when. Many shared apartments also have special rules about washing the dishes.

Snow clearance may also be included in the cleaning rota. If there is no caretaker and the town council is not responsible for snow clearance, the people sharing the apartment must clear the snow outside the building. This is very important as if someone slips and falls over because the snow had not been cleared, the tenants can be held liable and they will then have to cover the cost of medical treatment. A similar rule applies to corridors and hallways in apartment buildings. Tenants of the individual apartments are often responsible for keeping them clean. The rules governing these matters and how often the areas have to be cleaned vary from one shared apartment to another. To avoid conflict, ask.

3.2.4 Sorting waste

Waste is sorted in most households in Germany. There is generally a "biowaste" bin for compostable waste (leftover food, etc.) and a “Yellow bag” for packaging with a green dot that is not made of paper or glass. Waste paper and glass are also collected and disposed of separately. Most other waste is placed in “residual waste”. If you have any questions about sorting waste, ask your flatmates and get someone to explain the system to you.

3.2.5 Smoking

The rules about smoking also vary. Some shared apartments ban smoking in the apartment, including in your own room. In other shared apartments smoking is allowed in your own room, while others still allow smoking in all rooms. If it is important for you to know how this matter is dealt with, the best thing to do is to ask about it when you first view the apartment or when you make an appointment to view it.

The above points are just some examples of rules in shared apartments; each shared apartment has its own rules for communal living. If in doubt, it is better to ask once too often than once too few how certain matters are settled.
4. Furniture and furnishings

In addition to the large furniture shops in Giessen and the surrounding area there are a number of ways of acquiring low-price or second-hand furniture and furnishings. Some examples are given below.

The online edition of the Giessener Express has some ads for inexpensive, second-hand furniture and furnishings in the section "Möbel/Hausrat":

It is also worth looking at the noticeboards at the THM or JLU and in the Refectories for furniture for sale.

5. Tenancy agreements and tenancy law

Before signing a tenancy agreement, check it carefully. There are various kinds of tenancy agreements. For example, a fixed-term tenancy agreement will include a fixed date for the start and end of the agreement, i.e. landlord and tenant cannot terminate these agreements before the agreed end date (except for termination without notice).

NB: Not all fixed-term tenancy agreements are lawful, so please have them checked (e.g. by the Legal Advice Department at the JLU ASTA, Otto-Behaghel-Strasse 25D, Room 16.1; consulting hours: see below).

In the case of open-ended agreements, the period of notice for tenants is generally no later than the third business day of the third month before you intend to vacate the apartment. For example, if you want to move out of your apartment on 31 August, you will have to give notice by the third working day in June.

Longer periods of notice are not legal. Notice must be given in writing and signed. An email is not sufficient. The best thing is to hand over the written notice in person and in the presence of a witness or to send it by recorded delivery.

In the private sector it is customary to be asked to pay a deposit of two to three times the monthly rent (Student Services deposit: EUR 250). You have to pay this right at the start when you rent an apartment or a room. Your money is refunded when you move out unless you owe the landlord money (e.g. for unpaid rent or an unpaid utilities bill) or if your room has not been cleaned or has been damaged.

Further information on tenancy law and standard tenancy agreements is provided on the website of the Deutscher Mieterbund e.V.:

- www.mieterbund.de

The JLU Giessen ASTA provides free advice for students on matters relating to tenancy law. It is available on Monday and Wednesday from 11.00 to 13.00 during the lecture period and from 12.00 to 13.00 during the lecture-free period, in Otto-Behaghel-Strasse 25D, Room 16.1.
